Another Grim Russian Tale. Russian prison conditions are once nore flustrated by a grim story which more illustrated by a grin story which comes from Astrakam.

Long term reisoners in Russia have what they call a convicts' court, which is a system or code of honor among themselves, infringements of which are punished by various forms of torture. There is also a sentence of death, which in this instance was pronounced for some offense upon a fellow prisoner. The man's throat was cut with a piece of glass. To conceal their deed the murderers hoisted the body to the barred window, moving its arms about so as to give the impression that a man was trying to clamber through. A sentry outside saw the supposed fustive and fined three shors into him. Afterward it was only discovered by chance that it was not the bullets that had caused the man's death. Too Dry Yet for Winter.
